Notes on Contributors

Mizuki Watanabe is a PhD student at the Graduate School of Language and Society at Hitotsubashi University. Her Master's thesis centered on Kazuo Ishiguro's When We Were Orphans (2000), and her research interest is on how literature portrays identity.

Tomoya Arai is a PhD student of the Graduate School of Language and Society at Hitotsubashi University. His research interests include modernist novels (especially the works of James Joyce), translation studies, and the cultural relationship between the English-speaking world and the Italian-speaking world.

Ayumi Nishi is a PhD candidate at Hitotsubashi University, Graduate School of Language and Society. Her research interests include global anglophone literature, postcolonial studies, and feminism in a global context. She is currently working on her doctoral thesis on contemporary South African novels.

trade editions in English (MQUP 2020) and French (Boréal and Dépaysage, both 2021).